Confronting the Iranian Threat: Restoring Strategic Deterrence

written by Prof. Kobi Michael | 23.11.2026

Prof. Kobi Michael analyzes the strategic threat posed by Iran’s accelerating ballistic missile and non-conventional weapon developments, warning that stagnant U.S. military deterrence allows the Iranian regime to maintain the upper hand.

He argues that future military action must decisively destroy these threat capacities and address expanding proxy threats like the Houthis to force Iran to negotiate on American terms or enable internal regime change.

The full interview took place on ILTV on November 23, 2026.

*The opinions expressed in Misgav publications are the authors’ alone.