The Iran deal is neither a defeat for Israel nor a victory for the Islamic Republic

written by Prof. Kobi Michael | 19.06.2026

Tehran has made significant concessions, entering the negotiations militarily weakened, economically devastated, and politically fragile. It is now critical that Jerusalem help shape the outcome of the talks.

Iran never won a war, but never lost a negotiation

written by Meir Ben Shabbat | 19.06.2026

The deal gives the Iranian regime a lifeline from the lowest point it has reached and resources to rebuild its capabilities. Instead of forcing Tehran to sever its ties with Lebanon, it strengthens Iran’s hold there. With an outcome like this, the Trump administration is making itself a laughingstock in the countries of the region.

Mojtaba Khamenei’s 2040 threat exposes Iran’s drive to destroy

Israel

written by Dr. Yossi Mansharof | 19.06.2026
In the face of the US push for a deal that will funnel billions to Tehran, Israel must shift its paradigm and seek the active collapse of the Iranian octopus' head.

Are we witnessing a JCPOA redux?

written by Dr. Raphael BenLevi | 19.06.2026
The greatest danger of the emerging deal is that it may throw the regime a political and economic lifeline at the very moment when it is most vulnerable.

A lifeline for the Iranian regime

written by Meir Ben Shabbat | 19.06.2026
The deal will grant legitimacy to the extremist regime in Tehran and prove that the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps can survive even the immense pressure exerted by a global superpower. The resources that flow to the regime will enable it to rebuild its capabilities and, no less important, sell its citizens the very thing that drove them into the streets: hope for economic improvement.

Iran’s terror reach exposes Europe’s dangerous weakness

written by Dr. Yossi Mansharof | 19.06.2026

The arrest of a senior Iranian operative shows that Tehran directed nearly 20 attacks on European and US soil in just three months. This case underscores how Tehran utilizes its operational proxies alongside its ballistic missile arsenal to escalate its threat and capacity for harm against the West. While Washington is working to deal with the head of the snake, France and Spain are choosing a line of panicked appeasement.

Trump’s Iran strategy: Not narcissism, but a blueprint against China

written by Ruth Wasserman Lande | 19.06.2026

Why President Trump’s moves against Iran reflect a coherent global strategy, not political whim.

Justice and triumph in war

written by David M. Weinberg | 19.06.2026

The war against Iran had a coherent cause and was strategically successful. It is dishonest to deny this.

Iran is asking to be destroyed

written by Col. (res.) Dr. Hanan Shai | 19.06.2026
Tehran made a historic miscalculation. By striking regional states and choking a vital maritime artery, it echoed strategic blunders of the past.

The two-week ceasefire: A tactical pause or a strategic retreat?

written by Joseph Rozen | 19.06.2026
The Islamabad talks may produce a document, but they will not produce a different Iran. Trump knows this well