

Iran's Strategy is Unraveling

Fleur Hassan-Nahoum: I believe that Iran's strategy was initially progressing well, but now it's unraveling. Iran's primary objective is to carry out its agenda, which involves eliminating Israel and ensuring that the United States is no longer a significant player in the Middle East's strategic landscape.

Hezbollah is their most prominent and successful proxy. Iran established, funded, and armed Hezbollah, transforming it into one of the world's most powerful terrorist organizations. They employed a similar strategy with Hamas, the Houthis, and now are expanding their influence in Iraq.

Currently, they are in disarray. Their communication networks are disrupted, and Sinwar is hiding in a tunnel, under siege by Israel. As a result, Iran is desperate to demonstrate that it is still capable of retaliating.
